The tidal wave is accredited by most of the officers to a volcanic eruption Others say it might have been the turning over of a large iceberg to the northward of the vessel. It struck the ship while in fair weather, while the liner was going at her usual speed.

At the time of the accident, 9.20 o'clock Sunday morning, Capt, McKinstry was in the chart-room and the first officer was on the bridge. The ship went down in the hollow of the sea, and suddenly the giant wave swept down on her before she could recover. There was a crash as the mass of water boarded the ship on the starboard side, thundering down on hatches and deckhouses.

The ship recovered suddenly, throwing more water aboard. The wave broke high up, throwing down the men in the "crow's nest." Tons of water were own on the deck. The iron rail was broken down and the pipes snapped on "The sea rolled high up, but fortunately broke before we shipped it. It reached the top of the lookout and then fell with an awful crash on the promenade deck, coming in its greatest volume over the port side, well forward.

"The water must have been six feet deep that raced down the decks. It swept everything before it. The upper deck breaks off just before the after hatchway opening. Over this the boarding sen flowed like a cataract.

"It was fortunate that the accident occurred so early in the morning. Nearly all the pissengers were at breakfast or indoors. Of course, there was considerable alarm aboard the vessel, but we managed to immediately allay all fears. The ship trembled violently for a few seconds, but quickly recovered, and we proceeded.
